

How to Blurt: 5 Steps

Read this side first. Then flip over and fill the page.

1Pick a topic

Choose one specific topic from your specification, not a whole subject. Write it in the box on the other side.

2Blurt

Close your books. Write down everything you remember about the topic on the blurring page. Set a timer if that helps, but there's no set limit. Keep going until nothing else comes out.

Don't stop to check facts. Just get it all out first.

3Mark it up (different colour pen)

Switch to a different coloured pen. Circle or underline anything you're unsure of, questions that come to mind, and any gaps you notice.

4Check & add

Now open your textbook and notes. Fill in the gaps you marked, correct any mistakes, and add missing detail, still on the same page.

5Compose your final answer

Check trusted resources (spec, mark scheme, revision guide) for what a strong answer should include, then write a clear, complete version of your answer.

WHY BLURTING WORKS

Retrieval practice. Pulling facts from a blank page builds far stronger memory than reading your notes again.

Spaced repetition. Blurting the same topic again a few days later is what moves it into long term memory.

After your blurt

BE HONEST: HOW WELL DID YOU KNOW IT?

☐ Struggling☐ Shaky☐ Solid

BLURT THIS TOPIC AGAIN ON

Come back in 3 to 4 days. That is when recall really sticks.

Subject _____ Date _____ Time spent _____

Write everything you know. No notes, no peeking.
